TRAVEL REPORT

By NAMAN ARORA
naman@gdnmedia.bh

WITH more than 600 cities and 100 countries under his belt, global traveller Ken Utsumi, who recently blitzed through Bahrain to catch the World Cup qualifier against Japan, has no plans to slow down and is still excited everytime he sees football making the world a smaller place.

The 46-year-old 'eternal traveller' may have lost track of the number of countries that he has visited, once he crossed 100, but every exhilarating football match he has witnessed in 23 years of travels lives forever in his memory.

"Football is special to me, because of how passionate its fans can get and it's such a simple game that every country I have travelled to has a fanbase for it," the Japanese globetrotter told GulfWeekly on the sidelines of the recent Asian third round qualifying match between his home country and Bahrain.

"Football is a universal language that ignites passion transcending borders!"

Just for his love and undying support of Japan's football team, as well as his local team Vissel Kobe, Ken has been to more than 30 unique countries in the last 12 years.

This year alone, he has been to seven countries already, and after a week in Bahrain, is currently in Thailand.

Since 2001 and the age of 23, he has been chasing football around the world, starting with a backpacking trip in Europe visiting all the major cities as he tried to catch as many European League soccer games as he could.

The next year, he took a step few can even fathom - he quit his job to chase a life filled with travel, football, music, film, food and all the other passions he was yet to find.

"In 2002, on the opening day of the World Cup, the first-ever hosted in my home country by the Japanese national team, I resigned from my company, picked up my backpack and traversed Japan, visiting friends from elementary, middle, high school, university and from my workplace," he writes in his memoirs titled Eternal

Traveller published last year.

"I travelled by slow trains, night buses and even hitchhiked. Thinking back, the style of travelling while doing a homestay originated around this time."

Later that year, he moved to Toronto, Canada to study, and in 2003, founded U23, a remote work concept before the idea took hold in the tech valleys of the world. Since then, he has lived in Canada, Brazil and Japan for longer stints, while also having set up base camp in a smorgasbord of countries from Albania to Zimbabwe.

He has met the Prince of Swaziland, lost tickets for a World Cup final only to luck out and buy a sponsored ticket near the gates, visited Burning Man, fallen asleep under the Northern Lights in Whitehorse, watched as the world descended on Qatar in 2022 for the World Cup and even spent seven days on the Trans-Siberian Railway where he was interviewed by reporters as he made his way to Russia for the 2018 World Cup.

In 2012, he began an art project, collecting stories under the title World Odyssey: 23 Laps Round The World.

"The number 23 in 23 laps signifies my lucky number - the 23 of U23, my jersey number 23, and also my birthday which falls on the 23rd," he explained.

"I believe after 23 laps, I might be able to understand a bit about the real world, despite its inherent biases.

"It's merely the antithesis to the cookie-cutter, stamp rally-like round-the-world trips that are prevalent everywhere."

As for what he will always remember from the places he has been to, including Bahrain, his answer is simple: the people.

Deena

FILM REPORT

By MELISSA NAZARETH
melissa@gdnmedia.bh

CANADA-BASED Bahraini creative Deena Alsaweer's latest short film that explores the power of human connection and the resilient Palestinian spirit is set for global release this month.

The production, titled Stitches, will premier in Toronto after which it will be available online for a limited time.

Laced with humour, cultural nuances and 'a touch of bittersweet reality', the English language movie, with some Arabic, runs for around 13 minutes.

The plot follows Palestinian dressmaker Kareem and his feisty niece Hind who defy a wedding dress ban by smuggling the sartorial creations as wrapping papers into the country.

Since 2007, various items categorised as 'dual-use' – primarily civilian but could have military uses – have been banned or require special permission to enter Gaza. Wedding dresses were added to the list later.

"Stitches was part of a film residency hosted by the Toronto Palestine Film Festival (TPFF)," Deena, who wrote, directed and produced the short film, told GulfWeekly.

"I worked with co-producer, Kevin Laporte and Saudi filmmaker Maha Al Saati, who graciously helped me in the script development process.

"They (TPFF) announced the residency with the prompt 'pitch a story about what it means to be Palestinian today'. I wanted to show the nuances of Arab culture that we never see in Western media: passion, hospitality, resilience and a sense of community.

"Initially, my idea was to follow a Palestinian bride at a salon in Canada, showing the unique traditions of Arab weddings. But then I learned about a wedding dress ban in Palestine, amongst other household items such as chocolate, crayons, baby bottles and many others. So, I adapted my vision to a Palestinian-Canadian dressmaker who gets deeply affected upon learning about this ban," she added.

The project was filmed in a café in Ottawa, Canada where Deena is currently based. The filmmaker also collaborated with a local Palestinian-owned wedding dress boutique for props.

"Our biggest challenge was finding the perfect location," she said.

"As the film is visually tied to our main character, the dress shop had to be an accurate reflection of his personality: warm, colourful, inviting and well-taken care of.

"Kevin took on this challenge and not only did he find the perfect shop, but the owner of that shop had all the qualities of our main character. He was extremely generous, very supportive, kind and passionate about the message we were delivering through Stitches.

"I really wanted to include a Bahraini character in this film, but there aren't any Bahraini actors in Ottawa and none that I know of in Ontario/Canada in general. It's important for me to continue to find places in my work to spotlight Bahrain in any way I can," the Fulbright scholar with a Master of Arts in Film/TV from the Savannah College of Art and Design said.

Deena also revealed that the short film features popular Bahraini musician Flipperachi's song Hayalla Min Yana, Arabic for 'welcome to whomever is coming to visit us'.

The filmmaker also worked with Los Angeles-based former Bahrain resident Ashwin 'Xenai' Shenoy for the production's soundtrack.

"It's (Hayalla Min Yana) the most perfectly unexpected combination of visuals and music. I'm extremely excited for Western audiences to hear and experience this side of Bahrain.

"We put a lot of thought into the music to blend Western, Khaleeji, and Palestinian styles to create a unique rhythm that fits the story and characters," she said, explaining her collaboration with Ashwin.

GulfWeekly previously reported that Deena is focused on sharing stories where Arabs and Arab culture are showcased positively.

And while she enjoys making short films, she hopes to take the leap into feature film production soon.

"I am working towards becoming a full time director, but what I've learned through all my past projects and short films is that it's unlikely one can be a great director without working on the craft of screenwriting.

"So this year, my focus is on writing and developing a web series with a co-writer, and my first feature film, inshallah, with a co-writer as well," she added.

Stitches is premiering at the TIFF Lightbox Cinema on September 26 in Toronto. The short film can also be viewed online starting September 27, for a limited time – those interested can pre-order the film now.

FUSIONISTS:
The core quartet

Capturing the Khaleeji spirit

INFUSING the magic of Afro-beats with the spirit of Khaleeji music, Bahrain's popular fusionists Majaz are set to drop the third single from their upcoming extended-play (EP) album tomorrow, writes Naman Arora.

The musical quartet comprising three

Bahrainis - guitarist Hameed AlSaeed, bassist Salah Sharakhata and Jehad Al Halal on cello - as well as Saudi percussionist Abdulla Faisal, will be dropping Ya Lala this weekend.

When speaking to GulfWeekly, Salah described the music as, "another feel-good track that encapsulates the wondrous spirit of Khaleej, and navigates through its richly-textured beats and rhythms - with a tinge of North African influence - in a celebration of culture and diversity".

The four-minute-53-second Afro-Khaleeji song is set to have a music video to be released at a later date. It will complement their upcoming as-yet-untitled third EP, which celebrates the 'interconnectedness of African and Khaleeji music'.

"The non-lyrical chants in Ya Lala are vocables that are commonly used in Khaleeji culture and music, most often as a display of joy and care-free sentiments - an apt reflection of the nonchalant geniality of the Gulf and its people," Salah added.

Majaz, which means 'metaphor' in Arabic, celebrated a decade of making hypnotic beats last year and has been busy touring this year, performing at the Netherlands' Musica Mundo festival in June.

Their recent releases include the Moroccan Gnawa-inspired Heila Hei (a generational Bahraini phrase with no particular linguistic meaning), released in September last year, as well as Ala Wain (Arabic for 'to where'), released in April. Both these are expected to be included in the five-track EP to be announced in the coming months.

The band has previously performed in the UAE, Saudi Arabia, Netherlands, Tunisia, Egypt, and Bangladesh.

WHOA! NELLY IS BACK

COMEBACK: The album's promotional image featuring Nelly

I CONIC Canadian singer Nelly Kim Furtado's new album, 7, drops tomorrow.

The title comes from it being the artist's seventh studio album, and her first in seven years since her 2017 release The Ride.

"It's more like a collection. Fashion collections don't really have titles, they're just called collection number 10 or 21. This is my collection seven," she said in an interview, explaining the concept.

The 45 year-old singer confirmed her musical comeback last year and said she recorded more than 100 songs in 18 months.

The album was announced in July.

The Maneater singer said she wrote around 400 to 500 songs in four years, 14 of which were chosen for the upcoming project.

Nelly has sold more than 45 million records, making her one of the most successful Canadian artists.

Released in 2000, her trip-hop debut studio album Whoa! Nelly put the creative talent on the map, earning her commercial success, and the Grammy award for Best Female Pop Vocal Performance for her song Turn Off the Light in 2002.

However, she is known mainly for her work with Timbaland on her third studio album Loose (2006), which features Billboard 100 number one hits Promiscuous and Say it Right, which received Grammy Award nominations in 2007 and 2008 for Best Pop Collaboration with Vocals and Best Female Pop Vocal Performance, respectively.

BACK TO THE START

A NIMATED science action film Transformers One is out in theatres today.

The movie depicts the origins of the Transformers' home planet, Cybertron, and how its fate was forever changed by the early relationship of known rivals Autobot leader Optimus Prime (voiced by Chris Hemsworth) and Decepticon villain Megatron (Brian Tyree Henry).

Directed by Josh Cooley, this is the franchise's first theatrical animated feature film since The Transformers: The Movie (1986), which had Megatron (Frank Welker) killing Optimus (Peter Cullen).

Josh, who is a huge fan of the franchise, revealed that the trauma caused by the beloved protagonist's death influenced his prequel film. He assured other fans that it would not feature a scarring turn of events.

"When I first started on this film, knowing it was an origin story was the thing that really got me interested. I've seen all the live actions, I've seen the cartoons, I've seen everything, but this part has never been seen on screen before," Josh said in an interview.

"You want to see them together (Optimus and Megatron,) you want to love them together, so that when the relationship starts to fall apart, it's a tragedy," he added.

INTENSE: Colin brings Penguin alive on screen

DARK FORCES RISING

D C COMICS-BASED crime drama The Penguin is out on Max, with eight episodes scheduled to run until November 10.

Starring Colin Farrell as Oswald 'Oz' Cobblepot (also known as Penguin), The Batman (2022) spinoff series takes place one week after the film's events. It is expected to explore the Penguin's rise to power in Gotham City's criminal underworld.

"It's dark; that's what I can tell you about it. It's really dark. It's really heavy," Colin revealed in an interview.

"Not to say I didn't have fun, I had an amazing time doing it. It's incredibly violent. It's one man's rise to what he's always dreamt of inhabiting, which is a certain power or social status. This is Oswald's journey trying to rise to the top through extraordinary obstacles," he added.

The series will also star Cristin Milioti as Sofia Falcone, a psychopathic serial killer who fights the Penguin for control of Gotham's criminal underworld. Rhenzy Feliz stars as Victor Aguilar, a teenager who befriends the Penguin and becomes his driver.

TALE OF TWO BROTHERS

P OPULAR author Sally Rooney's fourth novel Intermezzo is set to hit the shelves on September 24.

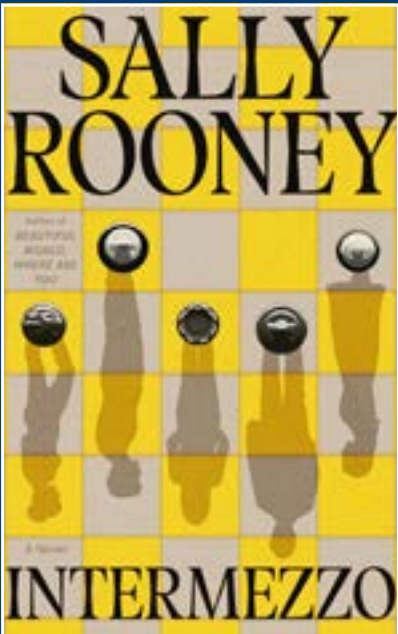

The book tackles two brothers grieving their father. Peter is a successful Dublin lawyer in his 30s who is meditating himself to sleep and struggling to manage his relationships with two different women - his first love Sylvia and college student Naomi.

Ivan is a 22-year-old competitive chess player who sees himself as socially awkward and a loner. In the midst of his bereavement, he finds himself intertwined with Margaret, who is an older woman.

Sally revealed in an interview that the decision to focus on brotherhood was not intentional, as she started solely writing about Ivan, then Peter came to her from a writing block. "I suddenly realised that Ivan had a brother, and, in that moment of realisation, I felt I could see the brother's entire personality, and these other important relationships in his life," she said.

The 33 year-old writer is best known for her two novels Conversations with Friends (2017) and Normal People (2018) which were adapted into namesake TV miniseries in 2020 and 2022.

THE 2024 Formula 1 World Championship will intensify this weekend during the Singapore Grand Prix, a fixture on the Formula 1 calendar since 2008, as top racers take to the grid to battle it out during the iconic night race, held under the city's vibrant lights, at the Marina Bay Street Circuit.

Here are some of the top storylines that are sure to keep fans glued to their seats and screens this weekend.

SEALING THE LEAD

The biggest question that the kingdom's F1 fans will be hoping to answer is whether Bahrain-owned McLaren can solidify the lead they took in the Constructors' Championship last weekend.

Although Lando Norris, who currently sits at second in the Drivers' Championship, acknowledged that the track can be challenging due to the humidity, he has done well on the track historically, coming in second last year and fourth the year before.

However, the team has not won a race there since 2009. "It feels good going into this race knowing we're currently first in the Constructors' Championship," he added. "The team has done and keeps doing an excellent job. We know we now need to keep working hard and delivering consistent results."

His team mate Oscar Piastri, fresh off an incredible weekend in Baku where he secured his second Grand Prix win, is also hoping to challenge for the top prize this weekend.

TROUBLES WITH THE BULLS

Red Bull fans who were hoping for the star team to turn around its fortunes after a lacklustre second leg of the season, were sorely disappointed when three-time champion Max Verstappen finished fifth and his team mate ended up 17th after a devastating crash with Ferrari's Carlos Sainz.

"We have learnt from what we did wrong last week in Baku and can try a few things differently this week in Singapore," Verstappen said, ahead of next Sunday's race.

"Marina Bay is a cool circuit but we do expect this to be a bit more of a challenge, as it has been historically.

"The race is usually quite close here and obviously very hot and humid.

"The changes that we

ACTION: Race at the Marina Bay circuit

Fight under the night lights

initially made in Baku were positive and we were heading in the right direction; we think we know what we can do better and of course need to make sure that we are optimising the set up."

Of course, not all is glum in the Red Bull camp - although Verstappen has not taken victory since the Spanish Grand Prix in June, he remains the only driver to have won more than two races this season with seven wins. In addition, Perez won the 2022 Singapore GP as he led from start-to-finish, after overcoming a five-second time penalty to win by more than 2.5 seconds.

PETRONAS TURNS 50

In celebration of Petronas' 50th anniversary, the Silver Arrows will sport a different look for this weekend's Singapore Grand Prix.

The predominant colour on the W15 will be the iconic emerald green of the team, replacing the silver on the nose and sidepods.

With Malaysia bordering the Asian city-state of Singapore, the Grand Prix this weekend is the closest race to the home of Petronas, and therefore a fitting place to mark the occasion.

"The livery looks incredible," seven-time world champion Lewis Hamilton added.

"I can't wait to see it on the car in the garage tomorrow and then to get behind-the-wheel on Friday. I am sure the fans will love seeing it up close and it will shine brightly under the lights of Singapore."

CIRCUIT CHALLENGES

The Marina Bay Street Circuit is a unique track, renowned for its challenging layout and demanding nature. With a mix of high-speed straights and tight corners, drivers need to be precise and aggressive to extract the maximum performance from their cars. The track's layout also makes overtaking difficult, often leading to intense battles throughout the race.

The Marina Bay Street Circuit's demanding nature and the potential for unexpected incidents can significantly impact the championship race. The last four Singapore

Grands Prix have had four different winners from three different constructors, so this weekend is definitely one to watch as the championship heats up in its final leg.
