SCOTTISH-BAHRAINI thespian Ghazi Al Ruffai's latest thriller film 28 Years Later is entertaining audiences worldwide, shining a bright spotlight on the kingdom's cinematic talent.

The 25-year-old, who attended St Christopher's School, is also set to star in the sequel 28 Years Later: The Bone Temple, which will release in January next year. 28 Years Later is the third instalment in the series, following 28 Days Later (2002) and 28 Weeks Later (2007), and explores the second outbreak of the 'Rage' virus.

There are plans for a fifth film 28 Years Later Part 3. A group of survivors from the first outbreak live on a small island. When a member of the group leaves the island on a mission to the mainland, he discovers a mutation that has spread to not only the infected, but other survivors as well.

"Filming 28 Years Later was simply wild! Everything was very tight-lipped during the audition process, so I never knew I'd be playing a key role," said the former Riffa resident who currently lives in London and brings 'Jimmy Snake' alive on the big screen.

During the initial outbreak of the virus, Jimmy (played by a different child actor) flees from his house after his family gets infected. While taking shelter at a local church, he finds his father, a local vicar, who gives him a necklace and urges him to escape, succumbing to the virus in the process.

"I make my first appearance at the end of the first film as part of the cliff-hanger, and the lead-up was intense. We had weeks of stunt training, which consisted of fight choreography, acrobatics and weaponry," he added.

Elaborating on his experience filming, the creative talent who lived in Bahrain for 19 years before moving to the UK said: "The whole thing was so surreal; I still pinch myself about it. Above all, to be directed by Danny Boyle, a true legend

ACTION: Ghazi in his element on set with other cast and crew

To be directed by Danny Boyle, a true legend that I have admired for so long, was a dream come true. Being able to work with legends such as Ralph Fiennes and Jack O'Connell was like witnessing a masterclass in acting daily.

that I have admired for so long, was a dream come true. Being able to work with legends such as Ralph Fiennes and Jack O'Connell was like witnessing a masterclass in acting daily. On top of that, my fellow Jimmies and I truly became a family. We all just clicked instantly that it felt like we had known each other for years."

Ghazi has always had the 'acting bug' in him and was an 'expressive' child growing up, forcing his siblings to join him and put on shows for their parents. However, he did not think it could happen. That changed during his years studying at St Christopher's School.

"At St Christopher's, I was able to explore drama in an academic setting. The drama department was incredibly supportive, and that encouragement helped me take acting a bit more seriously," he said.

However, a real turning point came when Ghazi joined the Makan School of Speech and Drama and met its founder and acting instructor Ruqaya Aamer, who helped him hone his craft and find his voice as an actor. "I credit so much of my growth and success to her," he noted.

The actor, who visits regularly, was in Bahrain in January this year when he visited St Christopher's and gave a talk to Year 12 and 13 drama and acting students, sharing his journey and offering tips.

After graduating school, Ghazi moved to the UK in 2018 to pursue acting professionally and trained at the Royal Central School of Speech and Drama and the Guildford School of Acting. Towards the end of his studies at Guildford, he landed an agent and it has been 'go go go' ever since.

His past projects include Layla (2024), and the docu-drama Lockerbie: A Search for Truth (2025), in which he portrayed Khaled Megrahi.

In addition to his screen work, Ghazi is a prominent content creator on social media, where his comedic and character-driven videos have built a dedicated following of more than 200,000. He is passionate about using his platform to challenge stereotypes and spotlight under-represented voices in the industry.

Enter the world of fantasy

WORD MAGICIAN: Bader

BOOK REPORT
By MELISSA NAZARETH
melissa@gdnmedia.bh

BAHRAINI author Bader Alsaideqi's new titles, The Wayfall Kidnapping and His Heroic Worth, are set to hit the shelves this month, transporting readers to a fantastic world of dwarves, elves, knights, princesses and more.

The 75-page The Wayfall Kidnapping is a villainous caper-crime fantasy novella – the creative talent's first attempt at the sub-genre.

"I wanted to try a story with more villain-centric characters," the 32-year-old told GulfWeekly, explaining his experience with the style.

"All the stories I write take place in the same fantasy world, but independent of each other, and while all have a focus on action and adventure, their characters are not necessarily all heroic. Writing a caper-crime novella added more fun and flexibility in my storytelling.

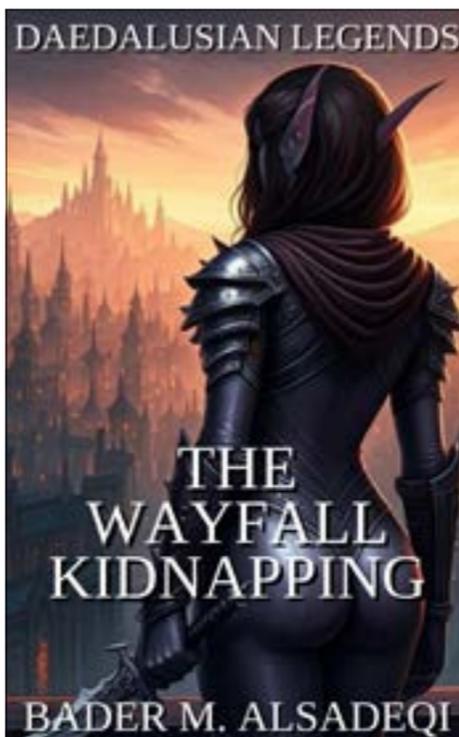

"The challenge was coming up with a more straightforward story while maintaining some fun and excitement, especially with the focus on villains as main characters. I felt this was something different, and I found the experience very enjoyable," he added.

A caper story is a type of crime fiction and unlike straight crime has elements of humour, adventure or unusual cleverness – the main character often exhibits comical idiosyncrasies and law enforcement individuals are typically incompetent.

Wayfall Kidnapping is set in the glittering city of Wayfall. The story explores a daring team of women, each with an unapologetic history involving crime,

UNVEILED: The book covers who are brought together for a job that might catapult them to fame or to the darkness of death.

The novella is part of Bader's Daedalusian Legends series, which currently comprises seven titles, including the new books.

"Writing these fantasy fictions has been a journey of weaving intricate plots, crafting more or less morally complex characters, and balancing the thrills with the depth of world-building," said the IT-systems analyst and holder of a Bachelor's degree in Information Technology and Security from NYIT.

"One of the greatest highlights has been watching the story evolve, seeing characters surprise me, twists unfold naturally, and the world take on a life of its own.

"The biggest challenge? Ensuring the mystery remains sharp while keeping the fantasy elements immersive and believable.

"I've been working on these stories for over a month or more, refining every detail to make the adventure as gripping as possible."

Blending action, adventure, and other tropes of traditional heroic fantasy, sword and sorcery, His Heroic Worth is a 54-page short story and tells the tale of Prince Ronvid of Novidraken and Princess Philippa of Corniashire, who have long been betrothed – their union arranged to unite two neighbouring kingdoms.

As the day of their long-awaited wedding draws near, the young couple temporarily escapes courtly life for a private retreat.

But their idyllic getaway turns into a disaster when a vicious wyvern descends from the skies, abducting Philippa, setting the stage for 'a crucible of devotion, valour and chivalry', one that will truly test Ronvid.

Bader has been passionate about fantasy and science fiction ever since he was a young boy, which inspired him to write stories of his own. His books are a testament to his 'wild imagination', which he dreams of sharing with others.

All of Bader's books are available on Amazon.

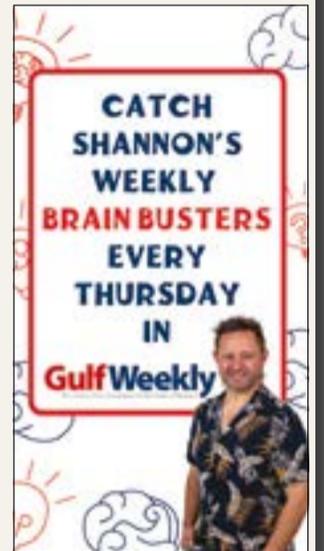

FICTION: An action-packed read with knights, princesses and imaginary folk

SPEAK YOUR MIND

CHANGE is the only constant, they say, and rightly so.

All of us have at some point or the other experienced a life transition, whether it is a trailing spouse trying to settle in a new country or a child who has had to change schools and make new friends.

Most of us have resisted when faced with similar situations, clinging on to the old and wary of what lies ahead, which can impact our mental health.

Our July Speak Your Mind topic explores 'how navigating transitions can have a negative impact on mental health'.

Write to us, in about 100 words, how you might have embraced a major life change. Email gdnnews@gdnmedia.bh by July 30 or follow @gdnonline on Instagram. The most creatively written entries will be featured in the paper – only original responses will be considered.

Congratulations to last month's winner, Veronica Selvarajan, for her creative response. We hope you enjoy your box of Raw Candy vegan chocolates!

TREND REPORT
By MELISSA NAZARETH

LABUBU mania has reached Bahrain's shores, with fans and collectors across ages tapping into the viral trend. So, what is it about the ubiquitous monster doll that makes it so covetable? Read on to find out.

For the uninitiated, Labubu is a plush toy and figurine, which is part of 'The Monsters' series created by Hong Kong-based artist Kasing Lung.

Based on Nordic mythology, it is known for its playful, mischievous nature, has a vinyl face and no tail. Some would even say it flaunts an eerie smile that is hard to miss. Other characters in the universe include Zimomo, Tycoco, Spooky and Pato.

Introduced 10 years ago as part of a picture book series, the doll gained popularity after Pop Mart started selling it in 2019; the key ring accessory is available on their official website for more than $100 a pop.

A selection of online and physical stores in Bahrain are also selling the toy and limited editions of it – the original ones are priced between BD18 and more than BD25 a piece, while the knock-offs can be purchased for as less as BD1.500.

It will also be available at the Bahrain Summer Toy Festival being staged at Exhibition World Bahrain, Sakhir, until August 5.

FUN: The life-sized Mega Labubu 'Tony Tony Chopper'

Recently, social media influencers have been opening the mystery boxes they come in online, promoting the Exciting Macaron range as a handbag accessory, further boosting the doll's rise to global fame and marking its entry into the world of fashion.

Some celebrities who have been spotted with the toy dangling on their handbag are the Grammy Award-winning Rihanna, American socialite Kim Kardashian, Grammy and Brit Awards-winning Dua Lipa and Bollywood Gen Z heartthrob Ananya Panday.

With the trend sweeping across the Gulf, digital influencers and well-known personalities in the region have also posted their love for Labubu on their social media pages.

Arab beauty brand owner Huda Kattan, who founded Huda Beauty, also unboxed a Labubu on her TikTok page and, most recently, posted a reel of herself eating a 'Labubu Dubai chocolate', while putting the longevity of one of her lip products to the test.

Bahraini collector Samar Busheri, who has been collecting vintage dolls and has an online store for Labubus, observed that the trend started in Kuwait. Bahrain caught on around two months ago.

"Adults and children in Bahrain are buying Labubu now but this trend is an old one – I got mine three years ago," the graffiti artist from Manama told GulfWeekly.

"The adults who buy for themselves are in the age group of 18 to 40 and others buy it to make their children happy," she added.

Bahraini mother-of-one Maryam Husain believes that Labubus are a harmless little joy, and there's nothing wrong with children getting excited about it.

"But it's also a good chance to remind them that happiness isn't about buying things or always wanting more," the 38-year-old added.

Bahrain-based Russian expatriate and artist Alexandra Novik-Khamis believes that Labubus' 'odd and slightly creepy but cute' appearance makes them highly shareable on social media.

"There is the element of exclusivity, making it a collectable," she said.

"When certain versions are limited edition or hard to find, it adds to the hype and desire," added the 36-year-old, who has always loved toys and miniature collectables and, though she is not a big fan of the Labubu character, she owns one and finds the popularity surrounding the toy 'fascinating'.

Like everything, Labubu also has two sides to the coin, with criticisms surrounding the hype – 'they're scary', 'they're too expensive'...

Many have tagged the trend as capitalist and feeding a culture of overconsumption, especially since it is packaged as a blind box, 'forcing' buyers to make repeat purchases until they get their desired Labubu.

The fashion world is also divided on the trend, with Sarah Jessica Parker, who is known for her style, especially after playing the lead character in the long-running series Sex and the City, offering an 'amused' and 'bewildered' look when asked about the ring accessories.

INTERESTING FACTS

- While Kasing was the artist behind the 'loveable' Labubu, Pop Mart chief executive Wang Ning now owns the rights to the doll.
- According to latest reports, Wang's net worth is presently $22.7 billion, making him the 10th richest man in China.
- An original Labubu has exactly nine teeth, which helps spot the fakes like the 'Lafufu'.
- More than 300 different variations of the doll have been released since they were first made in 2019.
- The most expensive Labubu to be sold till date is the Mint Green human-sized doll, priced at more than $150,000 due to its unique size and craftsmanship.

Alexandra Cooper, who hosts the popular podcast Call Her Daddy, asked the celebrity about the trend to which she responded, 'What is that?', sparking several debates that question if Labubus as an accessory are 'sophisticated' or 'polished' enough.

A TOUCHING TALE OF TIMELESS LOVE

MAGICAL realism novel The Art of Vanishing by Morgan Payer has hit the shelves.

The love story follows Claire, a gallery worker, who finds herself enamoured by an artwork of Jean, who is frozen in time by his painter father Henri Matisse.

Eventually Claire discovers she can step through the frame of Jean's painting and into a bygone era, resulting in the two falling in love.

"It is a magical love story about a museum employee and the man in a masterpiece hanging on the walls,"

Morgan said in a social media post.

"It's about time and art and the ways magic might surround us in our day-to-day lives, if we take the time to stop and see it," she added.

This is the author's debut novel. Prior to this, the bookworm launched an online platform for her to share what she is reading and her life in New York City.

Morgan also pursued a career in theatrical producing, and eventually joined a book publishing company where she handles marketing and the company's social media platforms.

FREEDOM: Kesha's album to release tomorrow

CREATING SAFE SPACES

A MERICAN pop singer Kesha's new album Period releases tomorrow, July 4.

This is the singer's first independent album-release through her label Kesha Records since ending her legal battle with former collaborator and producer Dr Luke, followed by her departure from his label Kemosabe Records in 2023.

It marked the end of a long chapter of her career where she was allegedly stuck in an 'unsafe and restricting environment', both mentally and artistically.

In an interview, Kesha said that with the new project she finally felt free – both creatively and legally.

She added that her goal, while making the new music, was to create a safe space for people to feel embodied and liberated, signified through the first track titled Freedom as well as the release date on July 4, which marks the United States' Independence Day.

The singer's first independently released single off the album, Joyride, was also released on last year's Independence Day.

"I'm really trying to embody freedom in every way possible. I'm trying to allow myself to feel what freedom feels like, because it's been almost 20 years (in the industry) for me," the 38-year-old explained.

"Freedom, by definition, is the power and the right to act and speak and think as you want to without any restraint. And it's terrifying for me to really embody full freedom, because it's the act of really embodying who you are to the fullest. And to really feel that, it starts with safety. So, that's why creating safe spaces has been my number-one objective," she added.

Born Kesha Rose Sebert, the pop sensation was encouraged by her singer/songwriter mother Patricia 'Pepe' Sebert to pursue singing after she noticed her daughter's talent.

The Grammy-nominated artist earned a near-perfect score on her SAT (Scholastic Assessment Test) and was offered a scholarship to Barnard College.

However, she decided to pursue her musical career instead.

A WEDDING NIGHTMARE

A MERICAN action comedy Bride Hard is out now in theatres.

Starring Rebel Wilson, the story follows Sam, a world-class secret agent who is demoted to bridesmaid at her childhood best friend Betsy's (Anna Camp) wedding despite prioritising her job over familial and friendship duties.

However, what should have been a weekend of reconnecting and celebration turns into a death trap when armed mercenaries crash the big day.

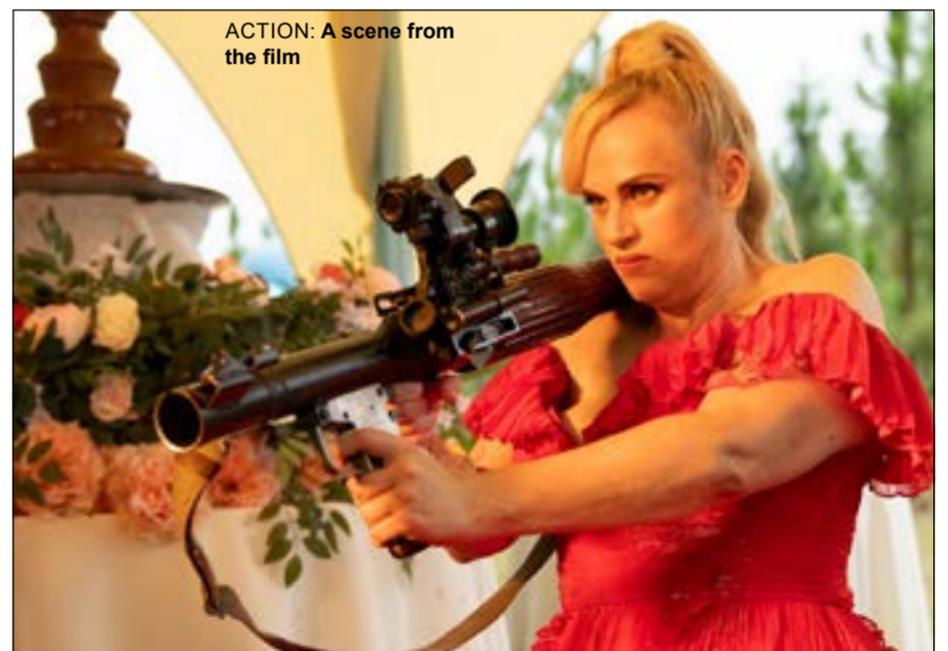

This puts Sam in a position where she is the only one who can save the bride, and her main mission being not only to take down the bad guys, but also to earn back the trust she lost along the way and learn to show up for those who matter in her life.

As the title suggests, the film is expected to combine elements of critically acclaimed movies Bridesmaids (2011) and Die Hard (1988).

In an interview, Rebel highlighted a lack of female comedies in the theatres.

"I think there still is a little bit of a perception that male-driven films are better, will perform better in the cinemas. But then, there are things that contradict that all the time, but then it never quite changes. It's still a little bit of an imbalance, even though it's getting better," she added.

"I always like to see a woman who can be funny and hardcore, and can be gross, and can be silly, and can be all of the things; that we don't have to just be that one thing," Anna added.

All eyes on Silverstone

ALL SET: A general view of riders in action during warm-up ahead of the race

THREE BRITONS CAN WIN BUT PIASTRI HAS HIS OWN SCRIPT

THREE British winners have their sights on a home grand prix victory this weekend but Oscar Piastri could rain on that particular parade as Formula One returns to where the championship started 75 years ago.

Australia's championship leader can still count on plenty of support as a McLaren driver but much of the crowd, and certainly the 10,000 in Silverstone's sold-out 'Landstand', will be cheering more for British teammate Lando Norris.

Norris won Piastri's home grand prix in Melbourne in March, an added incentive for the Australian at Silverstone, and the pair are turning the season into a two-horse race as the campaign reaches the halfway point.

Piastri is chasing a sixth win in 12 races while Norris arrives from Austria on a high after dominating every practice session he took part in, taking pole by a huge margin and holding off his teammate to win.

The two are 15 points apart, with Red Bull's reigning four-times world champion Max Verstappen third overall but now a hefty 61 points off the lead after a first retirement of the season at his team's home track at Spielberg.

"My favourite weekend of the year," said Norris, who has yet to take back-to-back wins.

"It's already a special circuit but to also have my family, friends, home fans and so many of the team there supporting us takes it to another level. I'll try to make sure I give the fans a wave as I drive past."

Piastri recalled he had fans chanting his name at Silverstone not so long ago. "I am not sure I will get that again but they have always been very accepting of me. I race for a British team. I am expecting that there will be more Lando fans than there are for me but that's fair enough," he said.

If Norris's support is strong, then Ferrari's Lewis Hamilton will always be the big sentimental favourite.

The last two races have been won by British drivers – George Russell for Mercedes in Canada and then Norris last weekend. Could Hamilton make it three and send the crowd crazy?

The 40-year-old won with Mercedes last year for a record ninth time and taking that tally into double figures, in what will be his first home appearance in the Italian team's red colours, would be something else.

Ferrari are the only top-four team without a win this season, other than Hamilton's Shanghai sprint success, and the seven-times world champion has yet to stand on the podium for his new employers. He has also gone 13 races without a top-three finish, a career low.

On the plus side, Ferrari were second fastest in Austria with Charles Leclerc third and Hamilton fourth and a new floor seems to be doing what it was supposed to do.

Hamilton usually manages to produce something special at Silverstone, set to welcome a record half-million fans this time over the four days.

Last year he turned up after 52 races without a win and seized one of the most emotional triumphs of his extraordinary career.

WINNER: Piastri celebrates with a trophy on the podium after finishing second in the Austrian Grand Prix

Russell, on pole as Hamilton's teammate last year, also has a strong chance – particularly if temperatures cool – and will be eager to bounce back from a tough weekend in Austria.

Italian rookie teammate

Kimi Antonelli meanwhile carries over a three-place grid drop from Austria.

Britain's fourth driver, Oliver Bearman at Haas, will be targeting points while the same applies to British-born Thai Alex Albon at Williams.

F1 BOSS EXPECTS UK RACE TO BE ON CALENDAR 'FOREVER'

SILVERSTONE circuit could stay on the Formula One calendar forever with no real rival to host the British Grand Prix, the sport's chief executive Stefano Domenicali said ahead of this weekend's race.

The Italian told reporters he could not imagine a championship without Britain, home to seven of the 10 teams, but there was also no chance of the country having more than one race.

"I do believe that... Silverstone has the right characteristics to stay forever in the calendar," said Domenicali, who is set to visit Downing Street with some drivers and team bosses to meet Prime Minister Keir Starmer.

"There's no other places where you can develop such a huge event in the UK. I don't see any other places, to be honest."

Silverstone hosted the first world championship race in 1950 and has a contract until 2034. Last year it hosted the biggest crowd of any event on the calendar with 480,000 spectators.

Miami and Austria's Red Bull Ring have the longest deals, both running to 2041, and Domenicali saw no reason why Silverstone could not join them although the circuit management had yet to seek an extension.

The meeting at Downing Street is billed as an informal celebration of the 75th anniversary of the first F1 championship race at Silverstone, but it is also a chance to raise issues the sport wants addressed.

Domenicali said he would highlight how much the "F1 ecosystem" contributes to Britain as the beating heart of a global sport, and the risk of losing that primacy due to restrictions on staff and movement.

Formula One figures calculate the sport brings 12 billion pounds ($16.48bn) annually to the UK economy with 6,000 people directly employed and a further 41,000 working in a supply chain of 4,500 companies.

The Italian said visa issues post-Brexit had affected the deployment of staff from race to race around Europe, while costly and time-consuming paperwork had complicated logistics and made it harder to draw up the race calendar.

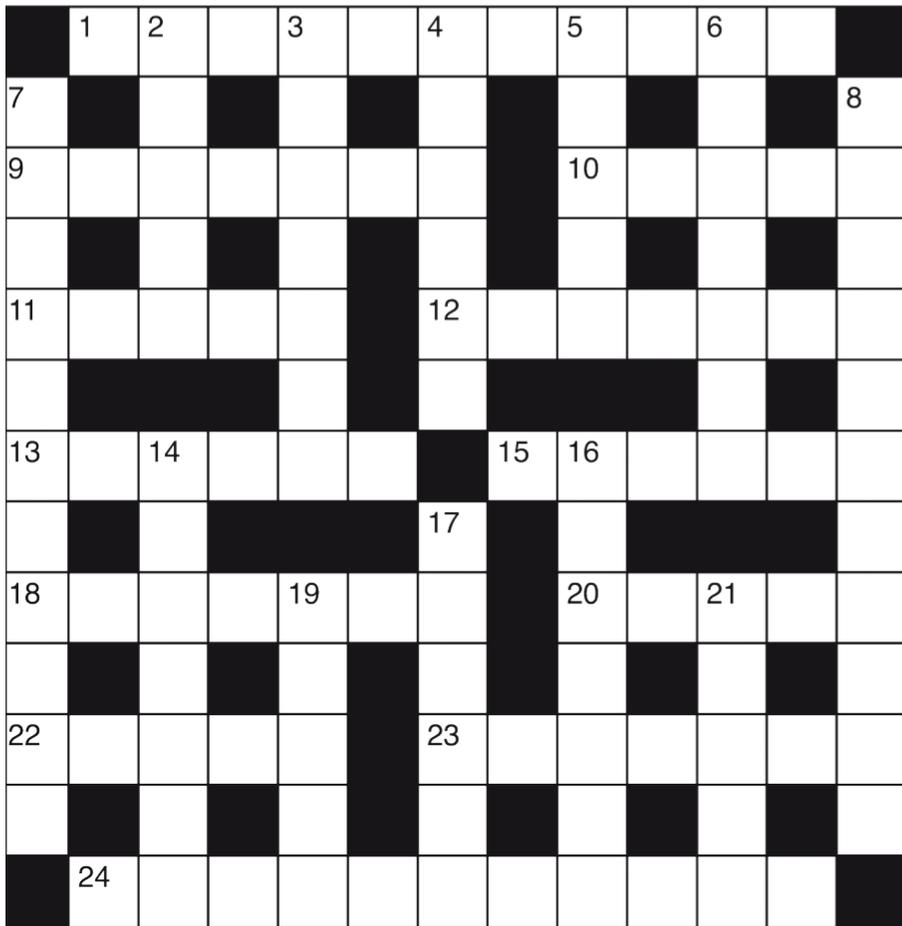

"It is impossible to think in the short term that the teams will move out from the UK because of this limitation but the teams will organise themselves maybe in a different way," he warned.
